New branch motto?

“...it seems plausible that a recent museum visitor might well describe The Scream as capturing the stress to humans and nature of climate change.”

Note that it cites both indicators and CIRA, as well as the CHA now.

Rona – thought you would want to see that this paper has been published. It's in much better shape than what I had reviewed. I had expected to see the revised draft, which did not happen.

I don't think it crosses any lines, but thought you should be aware that it's now available.

FYI,

Below you can access a copy of the published invited article I wrote on climate change and wildfires for the Gerontological Society of America's Public Policy and Aging Report.

Hi Ms. Sykes. I read with some interest a short digest of your paper "The Scream of Nature". In my job, I am responsible for risk assessment for air pollution, the setting of Canadian Air Quality Standards, and increasingly issues related to wildfire smoke. For perhaps obvious reasons, we are increasingly concerned about how to respond to public health imperatives in relation to fires that go beyond "get away from them". I am not able to access your paper, nor does it show up in any of our bibliographic databases, so I can't even find a way to purchase it: do you perhaps have the authority to provide a PDF copy?

Best regards.
